| Haversham | | | |

Built 1837-8 for the London and Birmingham Railway, engineer Robert Stephenson, widened on the east side 1878-82 by the London and North Western Railway to accommodate two additional lines. Built in red brick in English bond, repaired in blue engineering bricks with red sandstone dressings. Blue engineering brick used throughout in the widened part. It is the most impressive of the several viaducts on the line, being taller, more elaborately treated and with wider arches. It was one of the principal landmarks of the first trunk railway and one of the earliest viaducts on this scale. |

| Moated site, fishponds and associated earthworks 150m south-east of Haversham Manor | Schedule | 1011300 | Despite having suffered some disturbance in the past, the site survives largely intact and is a good example of its class. The central platform contains archaeological evidence relating to the occupation of the island, including the survival of buried structural foundations relating to the buildings that originally stood upon it. Environmental evidence relating to the landscape in which the monument was constructed will survive in the deeper ditch deposits and in the fishponds. The moated enclosure is rectangular in shape. The central platform of the moat is raised slightly above the surrounding land surface. The interior |

|---|-----------|---------|---|
| | | | surface of the platform is disturbed and uneven particularly in the northern half indicating the survival of sub-surface building remains. In the south-western corner of the platform, separated from the edge of the moat by a narrow bank, is a rectangular hollow. Its close proximity to the edge of the moat suggests that it is likely to be the remains of a small fishpond. To the east of the moated enclosure a recently constructed lake approaches to within 50m of the moat edge; in the area between are the truncated remains of fragmentary banks and hollows which are thought to represent the remains of village cross or garden plots. A roughly rectangular hollow which lies adjacent to the north-eastern corner of the moat may represent the remains of a second early fishpond. To the east of the moat some 60m upslope is a large fishpond which appears later in date. A second smaller pond of similar age lies to the north. |
